Appearance Text
He is a slender young man with black hair, clad in iron armor. He seems to be very young for a fighter, but this is a tough world after all. Sadness covers his dark eyes, as if there was a deep sorrow in his past. He doesn't speak much, you notice.
Background Text
Oakbridge was a peaceful small village in western Kynthex. But when Carian, the son of the local Lord Dalwain one day returned from an errand for his father, he found the village completely destroyed. Not a single brick was left intact. It must have been a very massive attack. What was even more disturbing was the fact that not even a single corpse could be found by Carian and the few other survivors - survivors only because like Carian they were not in the village when disaster struck. There were only 6 of them: Carian and his servants Ron and Rory, who had been on said errand for the Lord. Gwynna, a restless person, just returned from a neighboring small town. Lucandir Brownleaf, the young druid and the hunter 'Hawk' Wilkens had been in the forests collecting some rare herbs. Upon gathering this tiny band of survivors, it was concluded that they would turn to some powerful druids in a part of the wilderness not far away. Lucandir led the way. When they arrived, they told their story to the assembled old and wise druids. "The Evil that has struck Oakbridge is old and powerful," they told them, "yet we cannot see through its veil of darkness. We cannot fight what we do not know. But nevertheless we may be able to help you. If one of you is willing to endure an ordeal for the sake of your home, the spirits may choose to enlighten this person." "This is mine to do!" claimed Carian. "So be it, young Sir Carian." nodded the speaker of the druids. "Follow me. And you others, stay here, until you hear from us.". It was four days later, when Carian was returned to them - weak, but alive. His eyes had grown strange however, like a dark pool of water. "Do not ask what has happened to me," he urged, "but trust in me and the spirits. I can not see the path ahead, but I can tell if it's the right one. Follow me, and Oakbridge shall be alive again." Never since did Carian give such a long speech. The once outgoing and friendly Carian had turned silent, haunted by his very own heritage. He led them to the east and throughout the land - an end is yet to be seen.
Greeting Text
When you look at him, he greets you silently with a nod. For a moment you feel his dark eyes resting on you in a solemn examination.

She is a young woman with auburn hair and laughing green eyes. Freckles cover her cheeks, and most of the time a smile bends her lips. She wears leather trousers, a linen blouse, and a thick wool coat.
Background Text
Always happy Gwynna wasn't really touched by what happened to her village. She simply follows Carian around because he pays her - and to take care of him. He's so strange to the world outside of Oakbridge, and now even more. And hey, it may prove to be fun, adventuring around!
Greeting Text
"HEY, stranger!" You turn and look in her eyes, and she just stands there smiling. "I bet you didn't even notice that thief back there who stole this." With these words, she tosses your OWN pouch to you from your belt. "Sorry I wasn't able to...You owe me one!" She smiles at you and then wanders off. After some seconds you remember that you own a mouth and even manage to close it.
